Association of Certified Anti-Money Laundering Specialists Joins ABA as Official Service Member

MIAMI – May 5, 2010 – The Association of Certified Anti-Money Laundering Specialists (ACAMS) announced today its relationship with the American Bankers Association (ABA) as an official Service member.

"ACAMS strengthens its ability to assist our members with formal relationships with organizations such as the ABA," said John Byrne, CAMS, Executive Vice President of ACAMS. "By becoming a service member with this leading banking industry association, ACAMS will have immediate access to current information on banking policy, legislation and regulatory themes affecting a large portion of our membership."

The ACAMS membership base spans a multitude of institutions including banks, government regulatory bodies, money services businesses, brokerage firms, law enforcement agencies and insurance companies from more than 150 countries. As such, the association frequently seeks strategic alliances with like-minded organizations in order to enhance its educational programming and provide its members additional benefits.
