ACAMS to Publish Law Enforcement Edition of Quarterly Magazine

Leading Anti-Money Laundering Association explores relationship between public and private sectors

MIAMI – March 11, 2011 – The Association of Certified Anti-Money Laundering Specialists (ACAMS) has announced that the next edition of its ACAMS Today quarterly magazine will focus on the role of law enforcement in anti-money laundering (AML).

“Those of us who have been in the AML field for some time, recognize the tremendous role law enforcement plays in our combined efforts to stem the tide of money laundering. Oftentimes we fail to acknowledge the importance of the brave men and women in this area. One of the key goals of ACAMS is to raise awareness of the successes of those dedicated individuals,” said John Byrne, CAMS, ACAMS executive vice president. “This edition of ACAMS Today will help fulfill that goal by highlighting and exploring the role of the law enforcement community in AML.”

The special edition will be an extended length and circulation and feature articles written by prominent figures in the AML field from both the private and public sectors.

Karla Monterrosa-Yancey, CAMS, Editor of ACAMS Today said she is extremely excited for this edition of the magazine. “Collaboration between compliance and law enforcement professionals is here to stay and the joint efforts of both are highlighted in the many articles within the magazine,” explained Monterrosa.

The law enforcement edition of ACAMS Today is due to release mid-march and will be highlighted on the association’s homepage and downloadable in the ACAMS membership resource center.
