Jinxia Niu, Main developer of fact-checking programs run by CAA
Yamil Velez, Assistant Professor, Political Science, Columbia
Elira Canga, founding member of the first Albanian-language fact-checking organization, Factoje.al

This panel will discuss the current state of in-language information integrity work, focusing on the opportunities and challenges that the contemporary socio-digital environment brings to this effort. The panel will be intentionally composed of researchers and practitioners who have collaborated or partnered across the fields, sharing their insights into how cross-profession collaboration between academic researchers and information integrity practitioners can help advance scholarly knowledge as well as expanding our field's overall mission to inform the public in the age of misinformation. The panel will be of interest to scholars whose research areas include misinformation and fact-checking research, civic technologies, media literacy, or news services for underrepresented populations.

Moderating/Presiding

Munachim Amah, Iowa

Panelists

Anita Varma, Texas at Austin

Eunbi Lee, National University of Singapore

Shahira Fahmy, American University in Cairo

Lorenzo Dalvit, Rhodes University, South Africa

This panel advances academic discussions on this topic and features contributors to the Journal of Communication Inquiry's special issue, "Media and Human Suffering: Foundations, Ruptures, Continuities," scheduled for publication in fall 2025. Panelists will discuss ethical dilemmas and frameworks for making sense of human suffering represented in and orchestrated by the media. Drawing on contemporary issues such as representations of Middle Eastern and European refugees, the construction of people with disabilities, and digital surveillance of Asian migrant workers in the United States, panelists offer novel approaches for examining suffering in the media and recommend pathways for a more inclusive and just society.

This panel reflects on diverse case studies where educators interact with diverse students in journalism, communication and media courses and implement strategies to enhance their learning experience. Culturally relevant pedagogy (CRP) is a theoretical and methodological perspective that seeks to improve student achievement by recognizing and building on students' cultural contributions in teaching and learning practices. It helps students to affirm cultural identity while developing critical perspectives that challenge inequities in our society (Ladson-Billing, 1995). This panel reunites projects of diverse journalism educators working in minority-serving institutions and or with international students. They will analyze the teaching and learning practices that include written, visual and multimedia outcomes. Panelists will reflect on their own strategies while teaching journalism, including bilingualism teaching and learning practices.

Nisha Sridharan, Temple

For decades, the news industry has been turning its attention to increasing its engagement with news audiences and members of the public. These efforts are intended to, among other things, improve people’s trust in news and increase their support for news organizations. One of the most challenging questions facing these efforts, however, is about their efficacy: Does engaged journalism affect people’s trust in, loyalty to, or support of news organizations? This panel brings together scholars who have tackled this question in their work to discuss the challenges and opportunities when it comes to evaluating the impact of engaged journalism.

In recent years, the academic community has recognized the importance of fostering diversity and inclusion in campuses across the country. However, many barriers, both physical and invisible, continue to impede the full participation of underrepresented groups, particularly within marginalized communities. This session will explore these invisible barriers and propose strategies for creating more inclusive academic spaces. Geographical challenges also persist, as many academic institutions are in areas that, while not overtly hostile, may not be hospitable to diverse communities. These environments can create an unwelcoming atmosphere that adds an additional layer of difficulty for underrepresented faculty and students. In summation, this session aims to shed light on these issues, discuss potential solutions, and share practical strategies for making academia more accessible and inclusive for scholars of all backgrounds. By addressing these invisible barriers, we hope to inspire a deeper commitment to equity across the academic landscape.
