

Lauren Beriont is experienced in working alongside community organizations to increase their impact and effectiveness through equitable means. Lauren has a wide range of experience working with non-profits and foundations providing organizational support, technical assistance, and advancing their evaluation efforts. Recent projects include partnerships with a group of national environmental funders on developing movement infrastructure and increasing grantee capacity, building and coordinating the Community Technical Assistance Collaborative (CTAC), and working with the Ann Arbor Area Community Foundation to Measure Quality of Life for Older Adults. Lauren is passionate about reimagining the way people work together through mutually beneficial partnerships for community well-being. She approaches each project with her love for evaluation, community-centered work, nature-based solutions, facilitation, and systems-thinking. Learn more about Emergence Collective: attached workshop description yesterday. You can learn more about Emergence Collective at <https://www.emergencecollective.org>.