A Message from Your Leadership Team

Greetings!

MSR has been stepping up its activities in recent months, with an emphasis on processing PDW and scholarly submissions for AOM 2025. We are proud to share that the numbers of submissions have increased, thanks to the active promotion of our division's lead team members and our outreach team to new global scholar populations.

We are also working toward some interesting virtual research meetings, as well as a virtual retreat, for which we will share the dates as soon as they are confirmed.

Through this venue, I would like to invite MSR members to consider recording a brief talk of 5 to 8 minutes on a topic they consider interesting to share with other MSR-friends and members. The topics may vary from MSR-focused research and teaching to a set of insights on how MSR fills your purpose in daily life. Attached is the promo flyer for your orientation.

Thank you for being an AOM friend or member. We continue to expand our activities as a division, and hope you will spread the word of our activities, which are geared toward greater connectedness and wellness on our beloved plant.

Warmest regards and much respect,
Joan Marques
MSR Chair 2024-'25

Mindful MSR Moments

MSR is inviting members and friends to submit a self-recorded talk related to one of the following topics:

- Your area(s) of MSR-related research and how used.
- The way you apply MSR related topics in your teaching.
- How you perceive MSR's importance or connection to other disciplines.

Guidelines:

- Quality: clear sound and picture for You-Tube posting
- Written permission from the speaker to be posted on YouTube perpetually without remuneration
- Duration: 5-10 minutes
- No offensive topics or political allusions.

The review team beholds the right to reject inappropriate submissions or request a revision.

Current Trends in MSR Research

Exploring the Intersection of Religion, Spirituality, and Organizational Behaviour through Quantitative Methods

Dr. Maria Eduarda Soares, ISEG - University of Lisbon

Throughout the first decade of my academic career, I regarded religion and spirituality (R/S) as fundamental dimensions of my personal life, but entirely separate from my professional life. As a researcher in Organizational Behaviour (OB), it had never occurred to me to explore possible links between R/S and OB, let alone consider how one might use quantitative methods to study such subjective and intimate experiences as religion and spirituality. That changed when I attended a talk on religious identities in Portugal. What struck me was that the concepts used – motivations, perceptions, beliefs – were very similar to those I had long employed in my OB research. This was the first time I acknowledged that R/S and OB might not only intersect but could be studied using similar frameworks and methodologies.

Over time, I became increasingly interested in understanding how employees' religious and spiritual orientations influence key OB outcomes such as job attitudes (e.g., job satisfaction and organizational commitment), ethical behaviour, decision-making, and leadership styles. I also realized that quantitative methods are growingly advancing evidence-based understanding in this area. These tools enable researchers to explore the complex dynamics between R/S and OB, enriching both scholarship and practice.

Quantitative approaches provide a systematic and objective way to examine the interplay between R/S and OB. Using standardized instruments (e.g., validated scales of workplace spirituality or intrinsic/extrinsic religiosity) researchers can gather large data sets from diverse religious contexts. Techniques like regression analysis and structural equation modelling (SEM), help control for confounding variables and clarify the direction and strength of these relationships. Given the multidimensional nature of R/S phenomena, higher-order constructs in SEM are particularly useful.

A bibliometric review conducted for the 2023 MSR five-year review showed that, for the period 2004-2021, the number of quantitative papers published in the Journal of Management, Spirituality and Religion (JMSR) exceeded that of qualitative research. That said, I often find it challenging to find fellow researchers who share a passion for both R/S and quantitative methods. If you happen to be one of those kindred spirits, I'd love to connect—don't hesitate to reach out!
