A word from the Board

Dear Valerie,

With a new fiscal year upon us, the Board of Directors and its eager volunteers are excited to plan new initiatives and events for our local CFA Society. Naturally, the present health crisis continues to limit many of our traditional in-person activities, but as we have seen, virtual meetings and conferences can take place – and sometimes offer even more convenience to our busy members. While it will likely still be several months before some traditional events can be planned, the Board and our members have expressed a desire to have such gatherings. They will likely be in a modified format and for a smaller number of people, but they are still expected to be just as fun – once we are in a position to offer them again. Until then, members are reminded of the many webinars offered to them, from CFAI, partnering CFA Societies and our organisation here locally. Furthermore, many other digital resources exist for members on the CFA Institute website, such as the FAJ and other publications.

As we get ready for the return to work and school after the Summer break, we wish the best to everyone and hope everyone stays safe and healthy going forward.

We look forward to seeing you again soon, either virtually or in person.

CFA Institute to Transition to Computer-Based Testing For All Levels of the CFA® Program in 2021

CFA Institute has announced that it will transition to Computer-Based Testing (CBT) for all three levels of the CFA Program in 2021. Level II and Level III examinations for 2021 will be administered via CBT, along with the already-announced transition for Level I. The December 2020 administrations will therefore be the final paper-based tests for any CFA Program exam.

The decision to accelerate the move to CBT for Levels II and III is in response to the impact of COVID-19. CFA Institute had been planning this transition as part of a broader effort to deliver exams via computers in secure test centers versus on paper in large testing spaces; this shift is already underway for Level I. This change allows CFA Institute to provide smaller exam settings, more exam dates, and easier scheduling with more locations. Click here to learn more

A study examines the impact of key regulations, including MiFID II and PRIIPS, on the dynamic relationship between manufacturers and distributors

A new study published by CFA Institute suggests that the asset management industry supports the principle of standardisation of investor information across the EU, but the multitude of regulations and directives dealing with product governance and suitability fall short in terms of harmonisation across member-states. It also highlights the challenges and unintended consequences associated with their high levels of complexity.

The Intraday Timing of Rating Changes

Did you know that when Standard & Poor's (S&P) communicates rating changes after trading hours, the changes are more likely to be downgrades and carry additional consequences? They also tend to be associated with more negative stock price returns and lower trading volume than downgrades announced during trading hours. This suggests that S&P's announcement pattern is consistent with better dissemination of information rather than catering to credit issuers. Since issuer-paid credit ratings are paid for by issuers, rating agencies might try to benefit key credit-issuer clients by timing downgrades so that they are released during periods when investor attention is thought to be lower.

The authors of this research look at the timing of rating changes in an intraday context to better understand their market effects and the possible motivations behind rating agencies' timing choices.

The Shift from Active to Passive Investing: Risks to Financial Stability?

The authors of this research examined how the shift from active to passive investment strategies affects things like funds' liquidity and redemption risks, market volatility, asset management industry concentration, and co-movement of returns and liquidity. Overall, the shift appears to be increasing some risks and reducing others. For example, some passive strategies amplify market volatility, while industry concentration has seen an increase. However, some liquidity and redemption risks have actually declined, while evidence on the links between indexing and co-movement of asset returns and liquidity appears mixed.

A Framework for Constructing Equity-Risk-Mitigation Portfolios

The framework of this study finds optimal portfolio weights for the risk-mitigation (or "insurance") portfolio and the return-seeking component for a variety of desired risk levels. The portfolio weights are calculated in falling markets, defined by the authors as quarters where the S&P 500 Index fell by 3.75% or more. The framework aims to find the most efficient risk-mitigation strategies—those with high Sharpe ratios—so investors achieve the highest possible returns after the costs of "insurance."

Using the framework, investors can input their equity return targets and their preferred conditional equity betas or risk levels.

An Empirical Evaluation of Tax-Loss-Harvesting Alpha

This article quantifies how much alpha is available from tax-loss harvesting and in which market environments these strategies are most effective. Advances in financial technology have made tax-loss harvesting more feasible for retail investors than such strategies were in the past. The authors evaluated the magnitude of this "tax alpha" with the use of historical data from the CRSP monthly database for the 500 securities with the largest market capitalizations from 1926 to 2018. Given long-term and short-term capital gains tax rates of 15% and 35%, respectively, the researchers found that a tax-loss-harvesting strategy yielded a before-transaction-cost tax alpha of 1.08% per year for the sample period. When the strategy was constrained by the "wash sale rule," the tax alpha decreased from 1.08% per year to 0.82% per year.
