NJ Real Estate Project Profile:
Brown Brothers Harriman

By Sarah Batchelor, HLW

Brown Brothers Harriman (BBH), a privately owned and managed financial services firm, identified the need to revitalize their Jersey City space and create a stand-alone business hub with a distinct identity paying tribute to their long history. Partnering with HLW for real estate strategy, programming, and interior design, BBH established their new contemporary workplace in New Jersey.

One of the initial project challenges was determining whether to stay in their current office or relocate to a new building. “HLW’s unique and extensive Strategy & Discovery process identified key project objectives including increasing collaboration and socialization among employees along with providing a destination space for clients and hosting community events,” explained Kimberly Sacramone, Principal at HLW. These project drivers informed the building analyses of BBH’s Stay or Go options. Ultimately, BBH opted to move to a new location that allowed them to take advantage of a condensed, flexible space.

Through Strategy & Discovery engagements, including a visioning session, end-user interviews, and observation studies, HLW aided BBH in establishing the vision for their future workplace. One that emphasized a welcoming, branded environment to support flexible, agile, and collaborative work. Mat Triebner, Director of Strategy & Discovery at HLW, said, “Getting end user input was key. The folks at BBH Jersey City were very generous with their time, which helped us to build solutions tailored to them.” This upfront Discovery process was crucial to facilitating consensus and quick decision making to meet BBH’s aggressive schedule.

Another key aspect of the decision making process was the involvement of BBH’s Design Committee. This Design Committee included representatives from each group who reside in the new workplace, from junior staff to senior management. This engagement was vital throughout the entire project process, providing continuous input and alignment.

Disability Inclusion in the Workplace

I recently had the opportunity to visit with our service delivery group in Tokyo. This group known as the Otasuki-Tai is comprised of employees who have a disability. We started this group six years ago to provide meaningful employment opportunities for people with both physical and mental disabilities (in some cases fairly significant). A lot of hard work has gone into making this program successful, both by management and the employees. However, the benefits of this program go beyond everyone feeling good as the members of this team are successfully supporting the mission of our organization through their work activities.

A colleague recently informed me that people with disabilities are the world’s largest minority group (World Report on Disability 2011). An estimated 15% of the world’s population has some form of disability with between 785 to 975 million people with disabilities being 15 years of age or older. People with disabilities represent a huge untapped source of human talent. However, they are too often excluded from society and the workplace. This exclusion prevents them from gaining and benefiting from experiences such as a good education and market-driven training that would give them the foundation to contribute to the workplace and the development of their country’s economies.

As I reflect upon my recent visit and think about the upcoming holiday season, I want to use my message in our CoreNet NJ Chapter newsletter to urge our members to take a moment to reflect on how you can change the life of someone through your support of disability inclusion within your company. If you are looking for more information please visit the following links or don’t hesitate to reach out to me to further discuss.

CoreNet NJ Women’s SIG Learns the Magic of Selling

By Alex Goggin, Century Group

On Oct 11th approximately 35 women united to network, connect and meet with Dan Hollis, Founder, Sales Trainer and Coach for the Magic of Selling. Dan’s focus that evening was to share his selling techniques, help us to understand how people think and have us all reflect on our own personal selling processes. It is all about your attitude on a daily basis. Be positive, never give up. Be bold. Be tenacious. Never stop educating yourself. Strive to be 1% better each day and don’t forget your thank you notes. These are just some of the tips we received that night.

The venue and food were fantastic. Everyone walked away with a copy of Dan’s book, “The Magic of Selling: A Treasure Map to Bigger and Better Sales” and of course, a refreshed and revived attitude towards selling. Thank you to our event sponsors: Century Group, Shaw Carpet, and Teknion.

feedback and directly informing the final design. Through thoughtful space planning, improved wayfinding, and innovative design, HLW created a 97,000 SF state-of-the-art workplace that addressed BBH’s guiding principles and their teams’ work needs.

The new cutting-edge lobby creates a welcoming and exciting entrance experience for staff and clients alike, which users rate very highly in their feedback about the new space. The design of the new reception creates a better client experience by increasing the efficiency and responsiveness of the reception staff. Clients and visitors are welcomed in the lobby space which includes three digital ribbons showcasing BBH’s history and people. One of the floor-to-ceiling screens is reserved for daily customization so it may be tailored to welcome specific guests.

“One of the primary project goals was to create a destination workplace—one that employees, clients, and guests would look forward to visiting,” said Kimberly Sacramone. Due to the confidential information managed at this office, security is a critical design feature. For the BBH Jersey City office, security and space planning are implemented in tandem. The main circulation corridor doubles as the main tour route, with a timeline of the company’s history and important dates highlighted along the path. Public facing amenity spaces such as the conferencing center, terrace, and pantry are placed along the tour route, allowing guests to get a sense of the BBH community without causing disruption or security issues.

Community involvement is an important aspect of BBH’s culture and having a space to host events in Jersey City was crucial. The large café is adjacent to the multi-purpose room, which is adaptable and can be opened to seamlessly create more event space. Whether it’s an internal Town Hall meeting or a public community event, the BBH Jersey City office can flex to meet the occasion’s needs.

Information Technology, Accounting, Human Resources, and other vital departments are among the 600 employees to use the open plan office, which is loaded with amenities, technology, and support spaces. Intuitive wayfinding and planning adjacencies formed neighborhoods throughout the office, facilitating cross-collaboration between diverse departments. These “homebase” neighborhoods create clear zones for focused work and are supported by IT Comms rooms, staff training facilities, and IT testing/development areas. The neighborhoods prioritize employee well-being with access to natural light and sit-stand workstations. “The core emphasis of this project was on the people and the rich BBH history,” Ann Mariani, Senior Designer at HLW, explained. “The employees of this office are a very tight knit group who celebrate life events such as birthdays and baby showers, host local community groups and charity events, and described themselves as a family. This particular BBH office provides vital support to all offices globally and supports the company around the clock. Amenities such as a café with healthy offerings, flexible Town Hall meeting space, Conference center, game room, “bagel & birthday cake” areas throughout the floors, and an outdoor terrace were among the employee requests that we fulfilled.”

Seamless technology is implemented throughout the workplace, facilitating agile working and global collaboration. To support staff collaboration and socialization, HLW designed a range of multifunctional meeting spaces, from small to large, bookable and non-bookable. Post-occupancy feedback from end users of the space showed the availability of spaces for formal and informal meetings as having the biggest impact compared to the previous space. The project accomplished a 73% increase in the availability of meeting seats while achieving a reduction in USF per person from 143 to 134.

“Our goal with this new space was to create an innovative, best-in-class office for our employees that differentiates BBH from our competitors,” said Brendan McCarthy, Vice President of Brown Brothers Harriman. “When you visit for the first time, it doesn’t feel like the offices of a 200 year-old private bank. The HLW team helped us achieve this by challenging our design committee to make bold decisions. The result is a playful but functional workplace that supports a variety of work styles and business needs. It has been a great success.”

The new Jersey City office showcases BBH’s brand and rich history as well as positions them for the future. With multiple generations currently cohabitating the workplace, choice in the work place is one of the keys for satisfied employees. Through adaptable design, Brown Brothers Harriman’s new workplace meets the needs of their current employees while allowing them to adapt for the future needs of current and incoming staff. Brown Brothers Harriman and HLW represent some of the oldest companies in their industry and continue their track record of being at the forefront of technology and transformation.
