Workplace Group visits National Audit Office

On Thursday 5th July, the Workplace Group meeting was held at the National Audit Office premises on Buckingham Palace Road in Victoria, London SW1.

The National Audit office, a Grade II Listed 1930s building, was refurbished three years ago to high environmentally sustainable standards, achieving a BREEAM Excellent rating.

Robert McLean of PwC who chairs the Workplace Group, said: "The National Audit Office's building is a great example of how a space can transform working practices and improve teamwork, with every member of staff working in an open plan environment. It also shows how workplaces need to evolve in line with market forces and economic impacts.

"We want to make sure we fully understand the current needs and challenges of occupiers. Visiting premises, both newly refurbished and operational for some time, as part of our activities are excellent opportunities for us to do this," he added.

The Working Group is currently preparing for its session on global workplaces at the CoreNet Global UK Summit in September and a breakfast seminar in October, focused on inspirational workplaces.
