East Bay Regional Park District and Livermore Area Recreation and Park District enter an agreement for the acquisition, planning, and protection of the Bushy Peak Regional Preserve. The peak and its environs had been recognized as sacred by generations of native Californians.

As a result of the increased threat mosquitoes posed to California’s economic development and health and well-being of its citizens, the legislature enacts the Mosquito Abatement Districts Act (AB 1590).

Metropolitan Water District of Southern California finishes construction of the Colorado River Aqueduct. June of that year, aqueduct water arrives in Pasadena marking the first delivery of Colorado River water to Southern California communities.

Turlock Irrigation District becomes the first publicly owned irrigation district in California. The district is now one of four irrigation districts that provide both water and electric retail energy directly to homes, farms, and businesses.

Rubidoux Community Services District, located in Riverside, holds its initial Board meeting thus becoming California’s first Community Services District.

Mojave Air and Space Port is certified as a spaceport by the Federation Administration and the district becomes the first facility to be licensed in the United States for horizontal launches of reusable spacecraft.

The Imperial Irrigation District cuts the ribbon for its new battery energy storage system, considered to be one of the largest of its kind in the western United States. It will increase reliability by providing the ability to balance power while integrating renewable energy resources into the local grid.