California has 163 Reclamation and Levee Districts

Since 1867, Reclamation and Levee Districts have protected the lives and property of millions of Californians

Reclamation and Levee Districts are responsible for managing and maintaining levees, fresh water channels, pumps, and other flood protection structures throughout the state.

In an effort to mitigate the risks of flooding, Reclamation and Levee Districts were formed to protect local landowners and their communities.

Reclamation and Levee Districts manage and maintain over 13,000 miles of levees that protect residential and agricultural lands.
