Merlin E. King (Gene King)

Mr. Gene King has been a member of the CSI for over fifteen years and has become a mainstay in the Indianapolis chapter. Since the beginning of his association with the chapter he has been one of its most active members. The Indianapolis chapter and its leadership are proud to nominate Mr. Gene King for the Hans William Meier award for his tireless efforts to nurture and support the certification programs. During his involvement with academic affairs for the institute, he has helped numerous individuals earn their certifications at different levels of the Construction Specifications Institute. Mr. King has been a true ambassador for the Indianapolis chapter raising awareness to all the advantages that certification brings. Mr. King has been an enthusiastic and devoted proponent of the need for continued education at all levels of the construction industry. He has personally invested in nearly every member that has earned their CCCS certification over the last decade. He gives above and beyond what is required of him. Not only does he meet with those seeking certification for four hours on six consecutive Saturdays leading up to the examinations, he takes time for individual mentorship. Providing a firm foundation of exceptional education for all who are willing to invest the time in themselves. Mr. King has been an educator for the CSI academies for the past ten years, but his investment in others has been a life habit. Mr. King is known not only for his generosity in the giving of himself, but also for his steadfast character and faith. He is someone that is continually turned to for advice and leadership throughout the Indianapolis Chapter. He has been an owner's representative, guest speaker, commencement address orator, and general contractor. Mr. King has successfully completed over 900 projects in more than five different states. While we can measure the number of buildings built or projects completed and monies saved or earned, one thing that cannot be measured is his impact on the next generation of the construction industry. It is due to his efforts in continuing to hold to the highest standards of the Construction Specifications Institute that will continue on through his students in the quality of their work. Mr. King truly reflects the values and nature of Hans William Meier and the reasons for which this award was created. I respectfully ask that you would help the CSI Indianapolis chapter and I honor Mr. Gene King with an award that he truly embodies.

Sincerely,

David J. Fryman, CSI, EP
