We suggest the use of the following announcement prior to your general session:

“Hello and Welcome. Before we get started today we’d like to take a minute to remind everyone that in the unlikely event of the need to evacuate this building an alarm will sound. If this occurs, please immediately leave the building using the nearest exit. Once outside, staff will be on hand to provide updates and information.”

Should an alarm sound during a presentation, may we suggest that the speaker assist with a safe evacuation by making the following announcement?

“Ladies and Gentleman, this alarm means that an emergency has been reported in the building. Would you please move immediately towards the exit nearest you and leave the building. Please remain calm and help each other. If you require assistance, please gather near the elevator where you see the blue sign and wait there for help from security staff.”
