

Chase D'Agostino is AVP of Corporate Solutions & Strategic Growth at QuisLex, a leading legal services provider. He works with legal departments and law firms to design, implement and oversee the delivery of legal services around contracts, M&A, legal operations and compliance. He draws from his experiences as part of the leadership team at QuisLex, an in-house lawyer at Colgate-Palmolive and an associate at Simpson Thacher & Bartlett.

Srikant Nair is an Account Manager and Head of the Legal Technology Group at QuisLex with over 12 years' experience managing complex contract analysis and document review projects. He also assists global corporations and law firms deploy process and technology solutions to drive efficiencies and control risk across pre-litigation, litigation and contractual matters.

Ned Gannon is co-founder and President of eBrevia, and drives the strategic direction of the company and is responsible for overall management. eBrevia uses machine learning technology to improve the efficiency and accuracy of contract review. Ned brings a broad range of legal and business experience to the company. While practicing corporate law, Ned represented private equity funds, strategic investors, venture capital funds and startup companies in mergers, acquisitions, financings and general commercial matters. Ned was selected by Capterra as one of five Legal Tech entrepreneurs to watch and speaks frequently on machine learning technology's impact on the legal industry. Ned holds a JD and MPA from Harvard.

Katherine Lowry is Director of Practice Services, and leads BakerHostetler's innovative legal R&D team, IncuBaker, which helps lawyers and clients navigate the intersection of digital business, emerging technology and law. She manages transformational technology initiatives such as augmentation of legal services using AI and intelligent automation, increasing enterprise data maturity and data literacy, developing smart legal contracts, and the delivery of information and research services. Notably, Katherine has led the team in extensive analysis and market research to identify issues that can be automated for businesses post-signature using smart legal contracts and blockchain-based solutions to streamline operations and improve client service.

Ashley Hess is a corporate transactional attorney and Co-Chair of BakerHostetler's Technology in Manufacturing national industry team. He has broad experience representing public and private companies on a variety of matters ranging from mergers, acquisitions and divestitures, to joint ventures, corporate governance and complex corporate transactions. Within the manufacturing sector, Ashley has extensive experience in the automotive industry, including advising clients on issues related to autonomous vehicles, supply chain matters, joint ventures and other collaborative development relationships. Ashley also has experience with acquisitions involving government contracting entities, including acquisitions of technology assets developed pursuant to government contracts.

Katlin Rust assists corporate clients in growth strategies and managing business risks. She works with companies on corporate and transactional matters. A strong advocate with experience in franchising and trademarks, Katlin places emphasis on client needs and efficient responses regarding all concerns and interests. Kaitlin holds both a J.D. and an MBA from the University of Cincinnati where she served as the Editor-in-Chief of the UC Law Review.

Steve McDevitt focuses his practice on corporate and transactional matters. He advises large and mid-size companies on mergers and acquisitions, strategic alliances and complex commercial transactions, as well as corporate governance matters. He also works with startups and emerging companies from formation through raising capital, hiring first employees, negotiating contracts, compliance matters and exit. Having worked for a regional chamber of commerce, Steve understands the concerns of business and is able to provide practical advice tailored to the needs of his clients. Additionally, Steve draws from his experience in lobbying and politics to apply a strategic approach in negotiations.

Rob Cortes is the Legal Annotation Manager for eBrevia and is responsible for driving the research, development and release of pre-trained provision models. Rob spent 10 years in private practice focusing on finance and M&A transactions at law firms such as Morgan, Lewis & Bockius and Weil, Gotshal & Manges. Rob then transitioned out of private practice and gained valuable product development experience at LexisNexis before joining eBrevia.

Jason Schachter is Vice President, Strategy & Operations at eBrevia, and works with internal and external stakeholders to determine and implement company priorities. He has particular expertise working with corporate, law firm, and audit/consulting clients on using the eBrevia system to increase the efficiency of their contract review process. Jason previously practiced law as an associate at Davis Polk & Wardwell and completed a coding bootcamp at Fullstack Academy. He holds a JD from Harvard Law School.