We are pleased to announce the Twentieth Annual Organization Science Winter Conference (OSWCXX). This year's Winter Conference will be in honor of Michael Cohen, a distinguished scholar of organization studies and an important contributor to the Organization Science community, who inspired many, not only with his scholarship but also with his unwavering support of countless individual scholars. Michael's work covered, and indeed pioneered, numerous areas of organization research, and the conference agenda will attempt to mirror the scope of those contributions with particular attention to the topics of organizational learning and the role of organizational routines, the use of experimental approaches in the study of organizations, the Garbage Can Model of organizational decision-making, and the consideration of organizations as complex adaptive systems. The meeting will take place February 6–9, 2014, at the Sheraton Steamboat Hotel and Conference Center, Steamboat Springs, Colorado.
