

Georgetta Simmons, EdD

My love for children inspired me to become a school counselor. My journey in education began in New York after my job in business came to an end. Since I needed to find a new job, I decided to use my degree and enter the field of education.

During my time in New York, I served as the Vice-President and later President of our Chapter. I always enjoyed preparing for our initiation ceremony and seeing the joy on the faces of the new inductees. After I moved to South Carolina, I've not been able to find an active local chapter to join, but I keep my membership active.

My advice for new teachers is to not stop at an undergraduate degree. Pursue your master's degree.
