The Community

Lifestyle

Wolf Point is a county seat in the northeastern part of the state where Wolf Creek flows into the Missouri River and is part of the Fort Peck Indian Reservation.

The Fort Peck reservation is home to the Dakota-Lakota-Nakota (Sioux) and Dakota (Assiniboine) nations. Today, Wolf Point is a trade point for local farmers and ranchers and a center for the Sioux and Assiniboine.

Wolf Point is the home of the annual Wild Horse Stampede, held every year during the second weekend of July. Wolf Point's Wild Horse Stampede is the oldest rodeo in Montana, and has been called the "Granddaddy of Montana Rodeos".

Wadopana Pow-wow is the oldest traditional pow-wow in Montana. The celebration is always the first weekend of August..

Wolf Point is serviced by Amtrak and the LM Clayton Airport, serviced by CapeAir.

HISTORY: The Lewis and Clark expedition began in 1804, passing through the Wolf Point area in early May, 1805. In the years that followed, a fur trade came to eastern Montana with the establishment of Fort Union and many other smaller posts along the Missouri and Yellowstone Rivers.

The first actual settlement of Wolf Point has been difficult to document. A map by John Arrowsmith dated 1834 shows a notation "Indian Fort" and the location coincides with the location of "Old Town". The 1856 journal of James H. Chambers, known as the "Fort Sarpy Journal" refers to Wolf Point several times. Also, a Major Edwin A.C. Hatch mentions Wolf Point in his diary of the same year.

Many old-timers from the area claim that Wolf Point was originally a Hudson Bay Trading Post but the Hudson Bay Company says this is not so. The first non-Indian settlement appears to have been in the early 1875 and is documented by the diary of William W. Alderson, Indian agent. He brought a crew of workmen and a steam engine/sawmill to Wolf Point, establishing a subagency for the Assiniboine people.

The origin of the name "Wolf Point" has also been difficult to verify. In her journal (1875-1876), missionary Lydia A. Fitch noted that Wolf Point was named for Wolf Creek, which emptied into the Missouri nearby. The most popular story is one passed down from William Bent, nephew of Kit Carson, who spent the winter of 1868-1869 hunting wolves in the area.

Another story is that as river steamboats approached the "point" or high ground on the river where Wolf Point had its beginnings, that hill appeared to have the shape of a wolf. The Lewis and Clark journals tell us that "the wolves are also very abundant" but were "lower, shorter in legs, and thicker than the Atlantic wolf." We will probably never know the truth behind the naming of Wolf Point; however, someone back in the mid-nineteenth century chose a name both colorful and unique.

A little trading post on the banks of the Missouri grew into a small village as permanent houses and buildings were built for the agency. The Presbyterian Church established a mission school (in 1895) for the Indian children, building dormitories and a church. In 1898, Joseph Pipal came to "Old Town" as a blacksmith and maintenance man for the Indian Service. He built a water system, complete with windmill and water storage tank, to supply the needs of the little hamlet.
