The National Association of State Technology Directors (NASTD) is comprised of the departments or agencies in each of the United States, the District of Columbia and the U.S. Territories having primary responsibility for the planning, design, provisioning and/or management of the enterprise information technology fabric within its jurisdiction, including entities within the states whose mission is to provide emergency communications and public safety services.

NASTD is opposed to the Federal Communications Commission's proposed D Block auction and recommends this spectrum be reallocated exclusively to public safety organizations.

Our position is comparable to that of the National Governors Association, the National Conference on State Legislatures, the Council of State Governments, the National Association of Counties, the National League of Cities, the U.S. Conference of Mayors, the International City/County Management Association and the National Association of State Chief Information Officers.
