

Frequently Asked Questions

UCNS Certification/Accreditation for Neurocritical Care

The United Council for Neurologic Subspecialties (UCNS) has prepared answers to questions that may arise regarding the recent American Board of Medical Specialties (ABMS) approval of the American Board of Psychiatry and Neurology's (ABPN) application to offer a Neurocritical Care (NCC) certification. This document will be updated as other questions arise.

Certification

Will the UCNS continue to offer NCC certification examinations after ABMS approval of the ABPN's application?

The UCNS has been offering certification for physicians in the subspecialty of NCC since 2007. The UCNS is committed to its continued support of the subspecialty and will continue business as usual including offering the 2019 UCNS Neurocritical Care Certification Examination as scheduled.

Can I continue my UCNS NCC certification?

The UCNS is offering the UCNS NCC Recertification Examination in 2018 (early application deadline is July 2; extended application deadline is July 16). All UCNS diplomates, including those in NCC, may continue their UCNS certifications through the new continuous certification process that will launch in 2020. The new continuous certification process means that after 2018, UCNS diplomates will no longer be required to take a high-stakes recertification examination to maintain certification. Instead they will participate in activities and short assessments that promote life-long learning related to their subspecialty.

I am currently UCNS-certified in NCC. Will I need to certify in NCC again once the new ABPN examination is completed?

Certification in NCC is voluntary. Current UCNS diplomates may continue their current NCC certification through the UCNS continuous certification process. The sponsoring boards that applied for the new NCC certification (ABPN, American Board of Anesthesiology, American Board of Emergency Medicine, and American Board of Neurological Surgery) will establish their primary specialty eligibility criteria and participate in the development of their own NCC certification. Their eligibility criteria will be published on the ABPN website by the end of 2018. UCNS certification will not automatically transfer to the newly created ABMS NCC subspecialty certification.

Will ABMS certification result in better reimbursement than UCNS certification?

No. Certification is not tied to reimbursement. Reimbursement is tied to taxonomy codes that are approved by the National Uniform Claim Committee. The UCNS and the American Academy of Neurology were successful in obtaining a taxonomy code approved for NCC (2084A2900X) in 2016.

Will my institution continue to recognize my UCNS certification?

UCNS certification has been the recognized certification for NCC since 2007. The UCNS will continue to uphold the high standards of its certification examinations and the peer oversight of the process. Educate your institution, department chairs, chief medical officers, and credentialing committees about UCNS certification through distribution of the UCNS Certification Recognition Document. If additional information is needed, please contact the UCNS and we are happy to speak directly to the appropriate individual(s) at your institution.

How can I find out more about the ABPN certification requirements?

Initial proposed requirements were outlined on the application to ABMS and in the ABPN press release. As final requirements are developed and announced, the details will be available on the ABPN website or by contacting the ABPN at questions@abpn.com.

Who should I contact at the UCNS if I have additional questions relating to UCNS NCC certification?

Information can be found on the UCNS website or contact Todd Bulson, Senior Manager, Certification at (612) 928-6067 or tbulson@ucns.org.

Accreditation

Will the UCNS continue to accredit NCC training programs?

The UCNS has been offering accreditation for NCC training programs since 2007 and will continue to support and accredit NCC fellowship training programs. The UCNS accreditation criteria was established by the subspecialty sponsoring organizations and the process has the oversight of the Accreditation Council.

Our NCC fellowship program is UCNS-accredited. Will we need to reaccredit through the Accreditation Council for Graduate Medical Education (ACGME)?

Accreditation, like certification, is a voluntary process. UCNS-accredited NCC training programs may continue their accreditation through the UCNS and new applications may be submitted. A proposal from ABPN for ACGME recognition of NCC has not yet been approved.

Who should I contact at the UCNS if I have additional questions relating to UCNS accreditation of NCC training programs?

Information can be found on the UCNS website or contact Amanda Carpenter, Senior Manager, Accreditation at (612) 928-6065 or acarpenter@ucns.org.
