

Jenna Larkin, MPA, MSES

Jenna Larkin comes from the Environmental Protection Agency's (EPA) Office of Pollution Prevention and Toxics at headquarters in Washington, D.C. As an Environmental Protection Specialist, she is a member of the Environmentally Preferable Purchasing (EPP) program where she plays a key role in the development of product sustainability standards and the management of EPA's Recommendations of Specifications, Standards and Ecolabels. The EPP program helps suppliers and buyers navigate this complex marketplace by defining what it means to be "green" and helps federal, state, and local purchasers identify and procure environmentally sustainable products and services. Previously, Jenna comes from Indiana University's School of Public and Environmental Affairs, where she received dual master's degrees in environmental science and public affairs.