

Joe Elwood

Joe Elwood works as a Contracts Officer for Oregon State University, specializing in revenue generating non-research based contracts and intergovernmental agreements. Prior to joining OSU, Joe was a practicing attorney in the private sector, a field service engineer in the semiconductor industry, and a nuclear operator in the United States Navy. This varied background allows Joe to connect with individuals at all levels of the public procurement and contracting sector. Joe prides himself on his ability to explain difficult contractual issues in an accessible and entertaining manner. In his limited free time, Joe enjoys weight lifting, playing guitar, and brewing his own beer. Additionally, he tolerates running as a necessary evil to combat the effects of the sampling of his beer.
