Raj Sharma is a social entrepreneur and thought leader focused on public-sector management and public procurement. As founder of the Public Spend Forum and GovShop, he is building a global market intelligence and community platform for public procurement that spans local, state, federal and international governments. By providing market data and practical tools that address the most critical areas of public procurement, his goal is “to create open government markets” where government can find the most qualified suppliers while lowering barriers for suppliers to work with government. Raj is a Board member of University of Pennsylvania’s Center for Asian Law and has served as a fellow at prominent think tanks.
