WV Gov. Justice announces task force for petrochemical development

Gov. Jim Justice launched an initiative Wednesday aimed at helping West Virginia prepare for the creation of a petrochemical manufacturing industry.

The Governor’s Downstream Jobs Task Force, which will be headed by state Department of Environmental Protection Secretary Austin Caperton, will develop sites for use by manufacturers and work to attract potential investors, according to Justice.

Justice said President Donald Trump and officials with the U.S. Department of Energy have told him West Virginia is on the verge of experiencing a boom in petrochemical-related activities, and the state must be prepared.

Advocacy Campaign a Success—But More Action Needed
More than 100 NSPE members either met with or called their legislators and staffers on August 7 as part of the Society’s Professional Engineers Day advocacy campaign. It was the largest such campaign in remembered NSPE history. PEs joined together to speak up for the importance of licensure and passage of a federal bill that would require PE oversight of utility pipelines, following the 2018 Merrimack Valley, Massachusetts, gas line explosion.

NSPE’s Manager of Government Relations and Advocacy Stephanie Hamilton called the day “a strong success” as enthusiastic NSPE members worked to build lasting relationships that will help them be seen as experts on licensure and technical matters now and in the future.

However, the week before the campaign, the Senate version of the bill was added as an amendment to a larger pipeline safety bill and watered down to remove the PE requirement. According to Hamilton, the Society was “disappointed” and “dismayed” about this change to the Leonel Rondon Pipeline Safety Act, named after the teenager killed.

It’s not too late to make a difference, however. NSPE members are urged to contact their legislators.
