Oklahoma City

Dr. Travis Roach, UCO Rodney Provience, CBRE

Dr. Travis Roach is an assistant professor with the department of economics at UCO and is an MBA faculty member. Roach originally hails from Austin, TX and made his way to Oklahoma by way of Lubbock, TX where he completed his doctorate in economics. His dissertation was a collection of three papers concerning carbon dioxide emissions in the United States. After completing his doctorate, Roach served as a postdoctoral fellow at the National Wind Institute where he taught courses on wind energy economics, policy and law. Before living on the windy plains of West Texas, he attended the University of North Texas where he received a B.A in music and a B.S. in economics.

Rodney Provience joined CBRE as a Research Analyst with a primary focus on the Office, Retail, and Industrial sectors of the Oklahoma/Northwest Arkansas Markets. His responsibilities include market tracking and analysis. Prior to joining CBRE, Rodney was an Intern Analyst for Tru Capital Investments, providing national due diligence and market research on potential acquisitions. Also, Rodney was an Operations Manager for a hotel management and investment company that focused on distressed assets and turnaround strategies.
