Michael McNulty

Librarian of the Army
Office of the Deputy Chief of Staff, G-1
Headquarters, Department of the Army
Washington, D.C.

Mr. McNulty is a career military librarian with 20 years of experience in U.S. Army, U.S. Air Force, and Department of Defense libraries.

He began his current assignment as Director of the Army Library Program, a position known as the Librarian of the Army, in May 2018. The Army Library Program includes 165 Army libraries and information centers in seven countries that share the common mission of supporting the information needs of military personnel, families, and civilians. Libraries include general, academic, medical, scientific/technical, and other specialized programs. The Army library workforce includes more than 750 dedicated librarians, library technicians, archivists, and other specialists.

As Librarian of the Army, Mr. McNulty is responsible for strategic direction, central support and administration, policy, guidance, and advocacy for Army library and information services. He manages the librarian career program, advises senior Army leadership on library matters, and leads the Army Library Steering Committee.

He was previously assigned to the National Defense University Library, Ft. McNair, Washington, D.C., the Army's Europe Region Library Support Center in Heidelberg, Germany, and Army libraries in Portland, Oregon, Fort Carson, Colorado, and Garmisch, Germany. His Air Force assignments include the Air Force Academy Library in Colorado Springs and the Royal Air Force Mildenhall Library in the United Kingdom.

Mr. McNulty's education includes a Master of Library and Information Science from the University of Wisconsin-Milwaukee and a Bachelor of Science in Journalism from the University of Idaho. He obtained additional training in strategic planning, contract management, information systems acquisitions, and executive leadership from Defense Acquisition University, National Defense University, and the Office of Personnel Management Center for Leadership Development.

Mr. McNulty is originally from Ketchikan, Alaska. He is married with two children and lives in Burke, Virginia.
