Journal of Hunger & Environmental Nutrition

The Journal of Hunger & Environmental Nutrition comprehensively examines local, national, and international hunger and environmental nutrition issues — specifically food access, food security, food production, agriculture, and the interconnectedness of nutrition and health. The journal is designed to provide current research and application information on public policy, legislation, and regulation related to sustainable ecosystems and the link with maintaining optimal nutrition and well-being for all people.

The Journal of Hunger & Environmental Nutrition provides a distinguished venue for the publication of original articles prepared by scholars and practitioners in the field and reviewed by qualified peers.
